Oldest War, Insects vs. Man, Rages on, With U S One of Chief Battlegrounds

The oldest war in history is still raging. It's the conflict between mankind and the insect tribe. One of its chief battlegrounds is the American continent, and it requires constant vigilance on the part of Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the government bureau of entomology, Dr. E. N. McIndoo and others of his associates, to protect the country's crops. The airplane, shooting out clouds of poison gas, is now aiding materially in the fight on the beet-lice and other scourges.

Navy Traveling Recruiters Here All This Week

Party After Young Men for Uncle Sam's Sea Forces

The United States navy is again open to applicants after a shut-down of over six months, according to Louis M. Brooks, chief electrician's mate, U. S. N., who is in charge of the traveling party from the Los Angeles recruiting office. The recruiting party will have their headquarters at the Torrance postoffice all this week, and can be interviewed there by prospective applicants. "The navy today," says Chief Brooks, "has more to offer than ever before. This is one of the reasons why we had to shut down, as we were filled to our allowed quota. We had so many re-enlistments that there were no vacancies for new applicants."

"A young man entering the service today has an opportunity to learn a trade that will fit him for civil life, as well as a chance to complete his education. The free study courses that can be had in the training stations and aboard ship are the best that can be procured from the modern colleges. Officers are detailed to help the young man in his studies so that anyone who is willing to help himself can reach any goal he may desire."

"Opportunity to enter the Naval Academy, too, is now open for the enlisted man. After one year's service he is eligible to take the examination for entrance to the academy, provided he is under 20 years of age at that time."
